today, Monday 20.05.2024

On Tuesday, a bad weather front will move into our area from the south and west. Initial southerly foehn-induced clearings towards the north should quickly disappear, followed by a few rain showers, which are likely to be heaviest near the main Alpine ridge. Temperatures will drop slightly again. Stable weather is not expected throughout the following days until the weekend. We will remain under the influence of a shallow low-pressure area, with daily cyclical effects playing the main role. The sun will appear somewhat more frequently in the mornings. As the day progresses, clouds will increase, and particularly in the afternoons and evenings, there will be repeated rain showers or possibly even thunderstorms. Temperatures will remain largely unchanged and will be moderately pleasant in sunny weather.
